During your pregnancy, you'll be evaluated by a healthcare provider throughout the pregnancy to assess your health and ensure that you and your baby are developing normally. Before you receive your first prenatal visit, it's important that you understand all of the health concerns that can arise during your pregnancy. The team at Denver Health medical center can assist you with questions about pregnancy and labor and delivery. When to Start Pregnancy Care? One of the first tasks of a new mom is to find out if she's pregnant. It can be challenging to tell if you're pregnant just by looking at your body. In fact, most women feel "pregnant" for between two to four weeks before they are actually pregnant. It's important to start the process of determining if you are pregnant as soon as you realize that you are pregnant. However, it's not recommended to start pregnancy care any earlier than the first month of pregnancy. This is because your body needs to rest and prepare to bear the weight of a developing baby. The first few weeks of pregnancy are important because they are the time when your body needs to make enough extra blood in order to support the growth of your baby. If your blood pressure is not stable at this time, it may be a sign that you are not pregnant. At Denver Health, we are able to detect pregnancy at seven weeks, although early ultrasound results can help to confirm this diagnosis. What Can Cause Blood Clots During Pregnancy? Another important concern during pregnancy is the risk of blood clots, which are also known as venous thromboembolism (VTE). During pregnancy, your risk
