In 2020.3, we've also added native support for AWS CodeCommit. If you have the AWS Android SDK and AWS Java SDK installed on your machine, we'll automatically set up the connection and update the filetype associations with the relevant AWS classes and methods.

Craniotomy for cerebral abscess. Surgical treatment of cerebral abscess has been performed in 22 patients, 16 of whom had an associated skull or dural fistula. Eleven of the fistulas originated in the parietal region, seven in the temporal, one in the frontal, and one in the occipital. In 13 of 16 patients who were followed for more than 3 years, the fistula closed spontaneously and function returned to normal in 10. Because of the possibility of more extensive resection with increased use of modern anesthetic techniques and because of the poor long-term results in the cases of fistula closure, the use of the burr hole and drainage in the treatment of cerebral abscess is recommended.

Screaming Socialism I: Mimi The September issue of The New York Times Magazine is a big old theme issue, what with it being the 900th anniversary of the Magna Carta and all. My favorite feature in the issue, though, was a report on a new study by the doctors at the Harvard School of Public Health. This study was actually named “The Walking Time Bomb” and was carried out by Daniel Alterman and Craig Mendelson in partnership with The Calorie Control Council. The walking time bomb? Clocking your time spent walking. There are a lot of bad habits out there, it turns out. You know, that too much time spent walking. Also, eating poorly, not sleeping well, not exercising, not being involved in healthy activities like walking, or participating in social activities (which are actually good for you, according to the new study). And no, working out doesn’t count as one of those healthy activities. Regardless, “The Walking Time Bomb” (like the study itself) showed that even if you didn’t spend a whole lot of time walking or sitting, it didn’t matter—you were contributing to the amount of time you should be spending sitting or walking, right? If only it were that simple. More significantly, the real lesson in the story was that sitting is the problem, not walking. And not only is that something we all need to be careful of, but walking might be
