exe script support and application deployment. Previous versions of OfficeSuite were driven by Microsoft Excel in .xlsx format . The new version of OfficeSuite encompasses the common features of file sharing, multi-user functions, .exe script support and application deployment. The implementation of these features relied on a .net platform using the ADO.Net data provider. The data provider is a database connector that can be used to connect to a database and retrieve data using a standardized .net language. The data provider is one of a number of supported connectors. The data provider can be used by OfficeSuite for file sharing, multi-user functions, .exe script support and application deployment. OfficeSuite starts with a new user interface, based on Word and Excel. The new user interface (UI) makes it easy to perform tasks with OfficeSuite such as search for files, send files, view files and perform other basic tasks such as sending email and editing documents. In addition, a new .net language is supported for the data provider to make it easy to write application logic that will perform activities in the database and other tasks that are specific to the data provider. New .net and .exe scripts are provided to allow user to write their own applications that run on the data provider. In addition, a data provider wizard is included in the package to ease the installation and configuration of the data provider. The package contains the following features: - Two Excel applications : Export and Import. The Export applications allows the user to exchange data files between their local machine and a .net language application. In addition, the Export application stores the files on the server and can be shared with other users using an email message.
