I got back into the sport of postcard collecting this year, and that made me want to start making some more cards. :) I am very much a beginner though, so I am trying to learn as much as I can, and this is a post that I hope will help others out. Where/How To Start So what is it that you want to do with your cards? You should have a plan. I started making cards for the ATC swap, and wanted to make some cards for presents, so I had to start somewhere. I know that in person, the first thing you are going to want to do is make a base, and then stick your art down. The reason you are doing this is to protect your art, as you don't want to cover it up with a stiff, t-shirt looking card. Plus you can start with the borders, and then add the art on top. You can definitely change your mind and decide later that you like your card better this way or you don't need it, so just keep that in mind. Postcards are usually a lot smaller than full size cards, so you don't need to worry about designing a postcard size. If you are posting your card, it should be the right size as you will be going through the mail, but if you are going to be giving them away, make them the right size for a traditional "greeting card" size. The postcard should be about 5x3" or 3x4" so it fits in a card slot. Also be aware of the postcard vs envelope sizing. They are about the same size, but most envelopes are more square than a card. I think that is one of the things that separates them. I use a "Reverse The Art" stamp and ink the heck out of the back of my cards, and I find that it helps to make sure you have enough ink there. So now that you have a basic idea, let's get into the details of what to do with that step by step. I hope you find the video helpful, and as always, keep on posting! TIP:For a more fancy, artsy look, and also to make sure that you don't get ink smudges on the back, paint the artboard on the back of the card. You will have to wash off your artboard once you have finished, but then, when you stick the postcard to the Regulation of iron metabolism and signaling in HIV-induced pathogenesis: implications in therapy and prevention. Iron metabolism plays a critical role in the pathogenesis of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) disease. Iron, acting as an essential constituent of essential enzymes and regulatory proteins, is necessary for viral replication. Defective iron metabolism leads to a vicious cycle with increased iron supply, viral replication and subsequent increased iron levels, which enhances cellular replication and the destruction of the immune system in infected individuals. Iron chelation therapy has been used to target the interaction of iron and HIV, and shows promise in the treatment of HIV infection. This review highlights the role of iron metabolism and its regulation in HIV-induced disease and the potential for iron chelation therapy for HIV-induced pathogenesis. Hetero-oligodendrocytes provide the neuregulin receptors in the oligodendrocyte lineage. Efficient transduction of oligodendrocytes requires the presence of hetero-oligodendrocytes (HOs). We have investigated the hetero-oligodendrocyte derivation from the neuroectoderm of C57BL/6 mice and compared it with the generation of Olig2-positive cells in neural crest-derived cultures. We report here that most HOs are derived from the neuroectoderm by a process that depends on basic fibroblast growth factor (bFGF) and is independent of Olig2. Using bFGF signaling inhibitor SU5402, we found that the self-renewing potential of neuroectoderm-derived cells required endogenous autocrine bFGF. In contrast, neural crest-derived cells do not survive on the inhibitor, suggesting that non-self-renewing progenitors (or fate-restricted progenitors) are required to generate HO cells. Furthermore, the comparison of neuroectoderm-derived cells and Olig2-positive neural crest-derived cells revealed a striking difference: the appearance of HO progenitors after the elimination of Olig2-positive cells in the neural tube. Our data indicate that HO generation in the oligodendrocyte lineage depends on the generation of a lineage-restricted progenitor that can be expanded by growth factors.
