Age-related alterations of responsiveness to vasoactive agents in the rat corpus cavernosum. To determine age-related changes of vascular reactivity to pharmacological stimulation, responses to various agonists were evaluated in the rat corpus cavernosum. The responses to noradrenaline (NA) and methoxamine (Mx) were augmented with age. The increase in Mx-induced response at 14-18 months was greater than that at 8-12 months. The increase in NA-induced response was maximal at 16-18 months. Responses to phenylephrine (PE) were increased with age, but the increases were attenuated after alpha 1-adrenoceptor blockade. Responses to the thromboxane A2 mimetic, U46619, were increased in the corpus cavernosum from 8-12 months. Furthermore, after molar induction of thromboxane A2, response to U46619 was enhanced by the same magnitude at 8-12 months as at 16-18 months. Responses to the endothelin-1 (ET-1) receptor agonist, sarafotoxin 6c, were enhanced in the corpus cavernosum from 8-12 months. Responses to the nitric oxide donor, sodium nitroprusside (SNP), were increased at 16-18 months. These results suggest that age-related alterations of responsiveness to various vasoactive agents are dependent on the stimulation site, and that corporal endothelial function could be preserved in the presence of enhanced vascular responsiveness.
