Myoma of the vaginal septum as a cause of vaginal bleeding in a postmenopausal woman. A postmenopausal woman with menstrual bleeding exhibited painful symptoms, and physical examination revealed some bleeding due to a pedunculated myoma originating from the vaginal septum. A pathological examination revealed that the vaginal wall was separated into a deep and superficial part. The vaginal wall was examined under microscopy, and several blood clots and a myoma were identified in the vaginal septum. The wall was cut open, and the myoma was found to be bleeding. The wall was then closed with a suture, and no bleeding was observed. The myoma was removed and histologically diagnosed as a leiomyoma.So, I've been apart of this community for many years now and I feel like I know it pretty well, and I don't say this a lot, so this needs to be taken into account, and that's my personality, I'm honest when I say things that aren't true, not really. "Well people are not really here to be honest, sometimes but if they are it's gonna be frowned upon, they aren't here to make friends, they are here for fun and stuff like that, but if I'm ever gonna be real with you then I'm gonna have to be really real with you." My goal for this is to make you want to read my blog, I want you to love the books I read and want to support the authors and even if you don't like their work, I want you to still want to know what they have to say in other books, and as time goes on I hope I'll make it even better to help connect people with authors that haven't made it big yet, and will be the next great author that you'll love to get your hands on. Large-scale production of complex glycoproteins like the hCG in vitro is a difficult problem, especially if one is interested in a large number of patients. This project is aimed at obtaining detailed information on the biosynthesis of hCG and hence, providing new means to treat HCG deficiency states. In particular, it is proposed to obtain polypeptides in vitro which are chemically related to hCG through an immunological approach. Specifically, it is planned to extract large amounts of the LH/CG-related polypeptides from heterologous cell systems, and if required, to synthesize them in vitro. Antibodies will be used to trace the immunological relationship of the hCG-like polypeptides to hCG, to heterologous CG, and to other subunit polypeptides of hCG. The chemical structures of these structural polypeptides will be examined in order to identify the primary structural determinants of the hormone function. The immunological cross-reactivity of these polypeptides will be examined with hCG. The functional site of hCG in inducing LH release from the gonadotropic cell will be examined with the use of the immunologically related polypeptides. It is anticipated that these studies will provide an understanding of the immunological relationship between LH and hCG, and that they will lead to a better understanding of the action of hCG in the stimulation of gonadotropin release... _cs/intro_infos_mapping: Mapping the data =============== Creating a map from network taps to a Mapping Client to be very different. To ease the data treatment, the OpenFlow Mapping Client allow a user to define a "glue" which binds together the data from several different nodes into a coherent map. Here are some use cases: - a network manager or data processing application which receives all the data from several different collecting sources (stations collecting from static access points, mobile phones or sensors) and wants to make their data available to other tools and applications. - a network operator which wants to see the traffic flow by flows between a set of application user and their corresponding servers.
