The in-game physics engine is an important part of the game, and the content this year is on a more realistic level than ever before. When a player takes a free-kick, the ball moves from player to player quickly, taking the goalkeepers with it. When attacking a player, the ball moves from player to player along realistic trajectories. These trajectories may be influenced by the surrounding team's defenders, and also by the defender's run speed. When attacking an on-ball situation, the ball moves from player to player quickly along a realistic trajectory, but it is hard to bend and decelerate. This means it can be caught even in spaces that are difficult to reach. When defending, the ball moves from player to player gradually along a similar realistic trajectory to that of the attacking player. This allows the defender time to catch up and the defender's goalkeeper time to position himself properly. When defending an on-ball situation, the ball moves from player to player slowly along a similar realistic trajectory to the attacking player. This slows the ball down, allowing the defender to catch up to the attacker, and the defender's goalkeeper time to position himself properly. Targeting "Catcher's Eye" technology is a new type of aim assist used by the DPI this year. When following up on a shot, the tracker will use motion capture data to analyze the expected target area on the first pass. "Goalkeeper Killer" technology has been improved this year. If a penalty-kick takes place far from the goalkeeper, the tracking technology will use the movement data to analyze the expected direction of the ball. If the ball is likely to go in a certain direction, the ball will be curved back to the goalkeeper, saving the goalkeeper from an awkward kick that can be easily finished. Recoil Whether using a long- or a short-range shot, players will feel the different effects of the ball hitting the ground using both gameplay and stat reporting. When shooting a long-range shot, the ball moves a bit more than it would in real life. This has a negative effect on shot power, but a positive effect on its flight path. Short-range shots move much less, but their flight path is more predictable. When using a long-range shot, players will use all their skills to make sure the shot is perfect, and
